“A Certifier’s Perspective on Material Recyclability”

How to increase the sustainability of packaging waste is not a new question, but still a topic of very high interest and is becoming more urgent than ever. The revision of the PPWR, but also consumer demand requires companies to move forward in their ambition to use recycled materials, to make their products recyclable, but also to look more into reusability to achieve a true circular economy. Recyclability has been in focus for a while but currently there are various options to evaluate the recyclability for packaging products – what are the potentials for harmonization? What role does and can a certification body like DIN CERTCO play here?

The current status quo regarding legislation worldwide and the related activities when it comes to standardization and certification will be content of this presentation.
